The Tree Of Peace

A living monument for peace, memory, and the planet

About the International Tree of Peace

Founded in Slovakia in 2018 by the nonprofit Servare et Manere (“To Serve and to Remain”), the Tree of Peace initiative plants living trees in place of stone monuments, honoring those lost to war and growing friendship between nations.

Across Oceania, Pacific peoples have welcomed the Tree of Peace into their own ceremonies and lands. The first Tree of Peace in the South Pacific took root in Neiafu, Vava‘u, Tonga. In Fiji, a Grove of Peace of native species was planted in Suva, and in Nadi an Indigenous community received the tree with a traditional kava ceremony and planted ‘ulu (breadfruit). In Aotearoa, King Tūheitia planted a Tree of Peace during the royal Māori Poukai gathering, and in French Polynesia the tree was planted by the President.

Volunteer-run and strictly apolitical, the initiative unites two urgent causes, peace and the care of our Earth, under one motto: “Let’s make love the lifeblood of this world.”

Ceremony in Hawai‘i

At the invitation of the Royal House of Hawai‘i, Kamehameha Foundation, and its lead benefactor H.R.H Princess Owana Ka‘ohelelani Salazar, the tree will be planted at the recently rematriated Hawai‘i Environmental Regenerative ‘Ohana Educational System for the Intergenerational Transfer of Knowledge Campus (HEROES ITK Campus), held by the Olohana Foundation. This campus will host local-international learners to learn climate adaptation strategies that intersect, food, energy, water, and knowledge systems, nurturing societal adaptation and resilience for Hawai‘i and the world.
